HENRI DE MONDEVILLE (1260-1320): A PRECURSOR IN AESTHETIC SURGERY
Denys Montandon, MD – Geneva, Switzerland

A native of Normandy, Henri de Mondeville was a well-read clerk who studied medicine in the city of Montpellier which had the first French university, created in 1220. Unlike the well known Renaissance surgeons like Ambroise Paré or Pierre Franco two and a half centuries later, Mondeville received the title of Doctor of Medicine which allowed him to be recognized as a true physician among his peers, as compared to the barbers or barber-surgeons who were considered as servants doing minor surgical procedures.

Mondeville completed his training in Paris under the direction of Lanfranco da Milano (1245-1315) who was the founder of the Parisian surgical school and had brought to France the knowledge acquired in the famous Italian universities of Salerno, Bologna and Padua. He also met another renowned surgeon, Jean Pitard (1282-1315) who was the surgeon of the King. With his support, Mondeville himself became one of the surgeons of King Philippe le Bel (1268-1314) and later of Louis le Hutin himself. He became one of the surgeons of Pitard (1228-1315) who was the surgeon of the King Philippe le Bel (1268-1314) and later of Louis le Hutin himself. He became one of the surgeons of

In fact, the so-called “present work” is a fourteen-year involvement on a medi-co-surgical treatise, which he was not able to finish before his death. Cyrurgia has been translated from Latin to Old French during the life of Mondeville, but fell into oblivion for about 500 years. Although copied a few times during the Renaissance, one had to wait to the end of the nineteenth century to rediscover the original text of Mondeville, translated into modern French by Edouard Nicolas.

By disagreeing with his contemporaries and the mentalities of his time, he often appears as a transgressor. His innovative ideas were not recognized for their value. Claiming the autonomy of science in regard to theology, although he was initially a clerk, we can see through his writings the birth of a laic spirit in medicine, hostile to the medieval tradition of mystery. Defending the unity of medicine and surgery, Mondeville wanted to make of his art a specialty depending on a new medical science, based on anatomy. For the plastic surgeon, the writings of Mondeville are particularly interesting with regard to several aspects.

A presentation to Mondeville

Treatment of wounds

According to the ancients, suppuration was useful, and if it was not produced of itself, it had to be provoked by the use of suppurative medicaments. These treatments often lead to inflammation and phlegmon. This was the method in vogue in Mondeville’s time to which he took violent objection. He insisted that suppuration was not only unnecessary to the healing of a wound, but was harmful and dangerous, that it increased suffering and disability, resulted in disfiguring scars, and led to complications and death. In its place he championed the method of Théodoric, claiming, “Every simple wound can be cured without the production of a notable quantity of pus, on condition that, without omitting any of the contingents, one treats them according to the teachings of Théodoric and ourselves.” This treatment entailed the immediate removal of foreign bodies, the prompt control of hemorrhage by whichever means was required, and the closure of the wound as quickly as possible, by burying it alone if that sufficed, otherwise by nature. Dressings consisted of compresses wrung out in hot wine and held in place by adequate bandages. Sup-} somewhat lettered, it would have been necessary for us to abandon this treatment.

Concerning facial wounds, Mondeville made a special note on the treatment of nasal injury:

One has to notice that, mainly for the treatment of wounds of the nose, a completely separated or gangrenous piece will never reconstitute. Reason: because the vital spirit is instantaneously lost, and that it is as impossible to recover as for the soul. It is however possible to recover sensitivity when it has not been entirely separated. If it becomes adherent, it may be sufficient or insufficient. In the latter case, it is better to amputate and let the wound heal by itself. If it can be saved, one has to remove what has grown against nature, to freshen the tissues until they ooze blood for a better reincarnation and suture them with a triangular needle.”

The placement and the duration of the stitches have their importance:

The result can be modified by the suture, because if you are in a hurry to remove the stitches, the nose may not be incubated or very little and with the movements of the nostrils, it will separate and that shall be worse than before. If you delay the removal, it will form a scar marked with a cross.

Mondeville takes this opportunity to make a few general thoughts:

Concerning nose cuts, one has to make the following general remark, that it is very difficult for a surgeon without celebrity, to dare employ a new way to operate while abandoning the one of the ancients, because, if the treatment is successful, people will say it would also have succeeded with the ancient method; if it goes wrong, it’s proof that the ancient method is better. A surgeon with great reputation does not have these difficulties.

Mondeville adds cynically:

If it is useful or necessary to make the

HISTORY

continued on page 44

ISAPS News Volume 8 Number 2
May – August 2014 www.isaps.org

42
Old courtisans require inside cares, mainly those who have an enlarged vulva, naturally or following repeated lubricious and easy coitus, in order to look younger or at least non-public.

At the end, Mondeville concludes that ...it is boring to relate and even more boring to operate; a whole day could not suffice to care for the whole body and each of its members. However, the careful artist, by praising the beauty and by praising his work, can take off a great profit, because the more the procedure is laborious in this kind of things, the more it is judged useful by the women.

The surgeons

Apart for these digressions on cosmetic medicine and surgery, Henri de Mondeville has written chapters on anatomy and is considered to be the first to have made dissections in France. He was also the first fully educated physician to defend the profession of surgeons: There are more conditions to be fulfilled to make a surgeon than to make a physician. The perfect surgeon should know medicine and moreover learn the way to operate manually, things that requires a deep study pursued with concern and for a long time.

For this the surgeon should receive a decent salary: What advantage does have a famous surgeon, renown and honest, if every day, from dawn to evening, without interruption, he runs from left to right, visiting his patients; if every night, reckoning in his mind what he has seen in each of his patients, he foresees and arranges what he should do the next day, if he spends all his forces and members. However, the careful artist, by praising the beauty and days, cannot suffice to care for the whole body and each of its members. However, the careful artist, by praising the beauty and by praising his work, can take off a great profit, because the more the procedure is laborious in this kind of things, the more it is judged useful by the women.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.

Aesthetic medicine and surgery

The most original writings of Mondeville concern the embellishment of men and women by various methods such as dermabrasion and epilation. Of course, most of these methods had been described before, particularly in the 11th century’s Trotula written by the women doctors of Salerno. However, Mondeville was the first to emphasize the reasons why qualified surgeons should include these treatments in their practice and justify the high fees of the surgeons compared to the physicians who do nothing with their hands! He is however somewhat ambiguous about this practice:

This embellishment is against God and Justice, and most often is not the treatment of a disease, but is made to falsify and fraud, besides that this subject does not please me. However, a surgeon who lives in provinces or cities where there would be many women of the court, and would be renown as a good operator in this art, could receive a considerable advantage and the favor of the ladies, which is not a small thing nowadays.

What are these cosmetic treatments for?

One must know that on men’s face, especially on rich, noble and lascivious citizens, you may find ugliness curable and lucrative, which does not bother cultivators or peasants. The number of these uglinesses is 6: Excessive redness, superfluous whiteness, burns by the sun and the wind, dark and ugly colors, hair against nature, scarcity of the beard.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.

Aesthetic medicine and surgery

The most original writings of Mondeville concern the embellishment of men and women by various methods such as dermabrasion and epilation. Of course, most of these methods had been described before, particularly in the 11th century’s Trotula written by the women doctors of Salerno. However, Mondeville was the first to emphasize the reasons why qualified surgeons should include these treatments in their practice and justify the high fees of the surgeons compared to the physicians who do nothing with their hands! He is however somewhat ambiguous about this practice:

This embellishment is against God and Justice, and most often is not the treatment of a disease, but is made to falsify and fraud, besides that this subject does not please me. However, a surgeon who lives in provinces or cities where there would be many women of the court, and would be renown as a good operator in this art, could receive a considerable advantage and the favor of the ladies, which is not a small thing nowadays.

What are these cosmetic treatments for?

One must know that on men’s face, especially on rich, noble and lascivious citizens, you may find ugliness curable and lucrative, which does not bother cultivators or peasants. The number of these uglinesses is 6: Excessive redness, superfluous whiteness, burns by the sun and the wind, dark and ugly colors, hair against nature, scarcity of the beard.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.

Aesthetic medicine and surgery

The most original writings of Mondeville concern the embellishment of men and women by various methods such as dermabrasion and epilation. Of course, most of these methods had been described before, particularly in the 11th century’s Trotula written by the women doctors of Salerno. However, Mondeville was the first to emphasize the reasons why qualified surgeons should include these treatments in their practice and justify the high fees of the surgeons compared to the physicians who do nothing with their hands! He is however somewhat ambiguous about this practice:

This embellishment is against God and Justice, and most often is not the treatment of a disease, but is made to falsify and fraud, besides that this subject does not please me. However, a surgeon who lives in provinces or cities where there would be many women of the court, and would be renown as a good operator in this art, could receive a considerable advantage and the favor of the ladies, which is not a small thing nowadays.

What are these cosmetic treatments for?

One must know that on men’s face, especially on rich, noble and lascivious citizens, you may find ugliness curable and lucrative, which does not bother cultivators or peasants. The number of these uglinesses is 6: Excessive redness, superfluous whiteness, burns by the sun and the wind, dark and ugly colors, hair against nature, scarcity of the beard.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.

Aesthetic medicine and surgery

The most original writings of Mondeville concern the embellishment of men and women by various methods such as dermabrasion and epilation. Of course, most of these methods had been described before, particularly in the 11th century’s Trotula written by the women doctors of Salerno. However, Mondeville was the first to emphasize the reasons why qualified surgeons should include these treatments in their practice and justify the high fees of the surgeons compared to the physicians who do nothing with their hands! He is however somewhat ambiguous about this practice:

This embellishment is against God and Justice, and most often is not the treatment of a disease, but is made to falsify and fraud, besides that this subject does not please me. However, a surgeon who lives in provinces or cities where there would be many women of the court, and would be renown as a good operator in this art, could receive a considerable advantage and the favor of the ladies, which is not a small thing nowadays.

What are these cosmetic treatments for?

One must know that on men’s face, especially on rich, noble and lascivious citizens, you may find ugliness curable and lucrative, which does not bother cultivators or peasants. The number of these uglinesses is 6: Excessive redness, superfluous whiteness, burns by the sun and the wind, dark and ugly colors, hair against nature, scarcity of the beard.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.

Aesthetic medicine and surgery

The most original writings of Mondeville concern the embellishment of men and women by various methods such as dermabrasion and epilation. Of course, most of these methods had been described before, particularly in the 11th century’s Trotula written by the women doctors of Salerno. However, Mondeville was the first to emphasize the reasons why qualified surgeons should include these treatments in their practice and justify the high fees of the surgeons compared to the physicians who do nothing with their hands! He is however somewhat ambiguous about this practice:

This embellishment is against God and Justice, and most often is not the treatment of a disease, but is made to falsify and fraud, besides that this subject does not please me. However, a surgeon who lives in provinces or cities where there would be many women of the court, and would be renown as a good operator in this art, could receive a considerable advantage and the favor of the ladies, which is not a small thing nowadays.

What are these cosmetic treatments for?

One must know that on men’s face, especially on rich, noble and lascivious citizens, you may find ugliness curable and lucrative, which does not bother cultivators or peasants. The number of these uglinesses is 6: Excessive redness, superfluous whiteness, burns by the sun and the wind, dark and ugly colors, hair against nature, scarcity of the beard.

For women, Mondeville is more explicit. It concerns the care of the sexual regions, breasts, armpits, hair, face, neck, and hands. For a lasting epilation “we should pull out the hairs, and insert immediately in the holes of their roots hot needles.”

For big breasts, he advises tight bandaging. On the face in general, there are 17 conditions that should be considered for possible treatments, for the eyelids, for the nose, and around the mouth. The care of most of them requires sometimes an operating surgeon who wishes to help these women, mainly old courtesans, who would like to feign youth.